WAREHOUSING

Warehousing in India has evolved from traditional 'godowns' to organized, technologically enabled logistics parks driven by evolving customer needs, the necessity to establish a logistics ecosystem, and a shift towards more efficient supply-chain models like the 'hub-and-spoke.' Increased capital investment and schemes have scaled the sector, creating a rising need for large logistics parks. These parks offer benefits such as cost leadership through economies of scale and value-added services, improved infrastructure, reduced risks and operational challenges, scalability, free trade warehousing zones, and ESG-compliant warehouses.

- Cost leadership through economies of scale and value-added services
- Better infrastructure to increase overall productivity.
- Lower risks and operational challenges, along with minimal service disruptions, and the ability to scale up at the same location without interrupting operations.
- Go-to-market strategy, encompassing innovation and business models.
- ESG compliant warehouses

WAREHOUSING

As warehouses grow and complexity, efficiency in operations can be achieved through three key drivers: Strategic planning of operations through the use of software solutions, the use of mechanization and machine automation and finally, digital tools to analyse data within a warehouse.

When implementing solutions in a warehouse, it is essential to consider the industry-specific warehousing needs of the client, the key warehousing automation solutions available today, and gather accurate and complete data. Additionally, the role of technology and automation must be evaluated, alongside addressing the skill gap and human resource requirements. The use of technology in scheduling multi-modal transportation must also be considered.

SESSION III: BUILDING A ROBUST WAREHOUSING ECOSYSTEM TO DRIVE GROWTH

As India's economy continues to expand, there is increasingly a decentralization of warehousing activities. In this case, developing a robust warehousing ecosystem has become crucial. Such an ecosystem can be efficiently implemented as investor interest in the sector rises. The emergence of large-scale logistics parks with sophisticated warehouses at their centre shows us what warehousing in India will look like in the next 5-10 years.

- The need for a warehousing ecosystem
- Multimodal logistics parks for seamless movement of goods
- Impact on regional warehousing and transportation industries
- The future of warehousing
